TOP 100

UCF's Master of Public Administration program is ranked in U.S. News and World Report's Top 100 graduate programs.

Message from the Chair

The Department of Public Administration now has five programmatic areas — public administration, nonprofit management, urban and regional planning, emergency management, and research administration. The formal Master of Public Administration program began in 1982, and graduate and undergraduate public administration education remains the overarching umbrella for all of our other programs. In early 2000, our department initiated programs in nonprofit management, which were followed by programs in urban and regional planning and emergency management. Last year, we received formal approval to begin our Master of Science in Urban and Regional Planning program, and this year we received formal approval for our new Master of Research Administration program. In addition, last fall we launched two doctoral program options that give students an opportunity to learn under the tutelage of our outstanding faculty.

This volume of the Public Administration FOCUS contains an article on each of our five programmatic areas. Our goal in these articles is to highlight student learning and service, and to aggregate the research efforts of faculty members and students in these areas. My hope is that you will share our work with others and continue your support of our department through your actions and your words.

NEWS FROM

Public Administration

The strengths of UCF's public administration programs lie in their interconnectedness with communities, ethical foundations, and scholarly and applied research.

This academic year, the Department of Public Administration achieved local, state and national prominence through its contemporary curriculum, innovative instruction, scholarly and applied research, and community service in public administration.

NEW GRADUATE PROGRAM OPTIONS

In the fall, the department expanded its academic programs (see back cover) to include a formal Public Administration Track in the Doctoral Program in Public Affairs, which prepares future leaders to deal with complex social, health and governance issues that cut across traditional disciplinary boundaries. The department also launched the first dual-degree M.P.A./Ph.D. program for students who are committed to research and higher-level education.

SERVICE-LEARNING ACTIVITIES

Doctoral students in Assistant Professor Thomas Bryer's "Advanced Seminar in Public Administration" worked closely last fall with city of Orlando officials on a research project for the Cities of Service initiative. The students, together with Bryer, surveyed four stakeholder groups (school principals, nonprofit managers, city and county officials, and neighborhood leaders), and engaged approximately 250 stakeholders in focus groups to determine the state of voluntarism in Orlando.

In another course taught by Bryer, "Cross-Sectoral Governance," M.P.A. students collaborated with International Baccalaureate students at Evans High School in Orlando to conduct a needs assessment for a developing community school at Evans. The report is available on the Center for Public and Nonprofit Management's website at www.cohpa.ucf.edu/cpnm/capstone_papers.shtml.

M.P.A. students in Associate Professor Wendell Lawther's "Advanced Concepts and Applications in Public Administration" capstone course produced community-specific project reports, including an evaluation of emergency response at the Sanford Airport Authority and a process evaluation of the Orange County Adult Drug Court Program. The reports are available online at the website identified above.

UCF AND ASPA, NASPAA

The American Society for Public Administration (ASPA) is the top professional organization in our field. Professor Kuotsai "Tom" Liou currently serves as president-elect, and several UCF faculty members (Bryer, Mary Ann Feldheim and Ronnie Korosec) serve on his leadership team. At ASPA's national conference this year, the department was well-represented, with faculty members, students and alumni making 14 presentations. At the local level, several faculty members are on the Board of the Central Florida ASPA Chapter: Bryer is chapter president, Michael Abels is chapter policy vice president, Feldheim is chapter secretary and Maria-Elena Augustin is chapter treasurer. Several alumni and students serve as well.

Every year, UCF faculty members attend the NASPAA Annual Conference to enhance their ability to teach public administration. In 2010, faculty members

Liou (standing, left) is recognized as a guest professor during his trip to Wuhan University in China in October 2010. Standing next to Liou is Professor Xie Hongxing, vice president of the university.

Bryer, Feldheim and Korosec made presentations at the conference.

INTERNATIONAL ACTIVITIES

Faculty members gave an unprecedented seven international presentations, at conferences in Argentina, China and Italy, this past year. The department's efforts to expand international collaborations were maintained by Professors Peter Colby and Liou. In two visits, in the summer and fall of 2010, Colby continued his efforts to partner with the Volgograd Academy of Public Administration in Volgograd, Russia, exploring cooperation in teaching, research and service. Meanwhile, Liou visited Shih-Shin University, Xian Jiatong University, Hubei University and Wuhan University in China, expanding our relationships with these universities.

This spring, Associate Professor Naim Kapucu published Governance Reforms: Comparative Perspectives, focusing on public administration reforms for good governance in the United States and Turkey. This text reflects the increased focus of our faculty on international and comparative public administration.

RESEARCH PUBLICATIONS

Several faculty members published in the top-10 journals in the field. Bryer and Professor XiaoHu "Shawn" Wang both published in Public Administration Review, with Bryer publishing two articles on citizen engagement and Wang publishing on performance-based budgeting. Kapucu and Bryer, with two graduate students, published an article on interorganizational network coordination in the Journal of Homeland Security and Emergency Management. Assistant Professor Christopher Hawkins published an article on local government joint ventures in the Journal of Urban Affairs and an article on cooperative arrangements and economic development strategies in the International Review of Public Administration.

In conclusion, the public administration programs at UCF are dynamic and research-oriented, as reflected in the quality of the research produced by our faculty members and students.

NEWS FROM

Nonprofit Management

As the economic recession continues to deepen, there is an increased reliance on nonprofit organizations by all levels of government to deliver goods and services to local communities.

UCF continues to provide Central Florida with qualified undergraduate and graduate nonprofit management students through internships and service-learning projects, and with cutting-edge research by faculty members.

STUDENT INTERNSHIPS

At the end of the spring 2011 semester, more than 390 students were enrolled in one or more undergraduate (201 students) and graduate (192 students) academic programs in nonprofit management (see back cover). These students completed more than 11,000 internship hours in the nonprofit sector, with meaningful experiences in organizations such as the Girl Scouts of Citrus Council, the Mustard Seed, United Arts of Central Florida, Heart of Florida United Way, Second Harvest Food Bank and Shepherd's Hope.

NATIONAL CERTIFICATION PROGRAM

Since 2002, UCF has been a member of the American Humanics national nonprofit management certification program, which officially became the Nonprofit Leadership Alliance in January 2011. Both this year and last year, UCF's program was a finalist for the national organization's "Program Excellence" award.

To date, we have helped 109 undergraduates apply for and receive national certification in nonprofit management and leadership, 37 of whom graduated within the past year. In addition, this academic year we began offering graduate students the option to pursue national certification as well.

RESEARCH PRESENTATIONS

Last fall, faculty members and students presented on capacity building, citizen engagement and collaboration at the 39th Annual Conference of the Association for Research on Nonprofit Organizations and Voluntary Action, the premier international conference on nonprofit management. Instructor Stephanie Krick and Chair Mary Ann Feldheim presented a paper entitled "Faith-Based Organizations Deserve a Break." Doctoral student Margaret Leigh Broxton presented "New Perspectives on Capacity Building," a report on the Center for Public and Nonprofit Management's (CPNM) "Strengthening Communities" federal grant. Doctoral student Maritza

Concha presented her research on "Understanding Collaboration, Its Antecedents and Perceived Outcomes in Service Partnerships of Community Based Organizations." Associate Professor Naim Kapucu presented his work, "Asset-Based Community Building Networks and Adaptive Capacity in Central Florida." Lastly, Assistant Professor Thomas Bryer organized a panel with participants from around the country entitled "Social Media and Networking in Civil Society and Civic Activism."

LOCAL, NATIONAL CONFERENCES

In January 2011, our Nonprofit Advisory Board members planned and implemented the 10th Annual Community Partners Nonprofit Management Conference in Orlando, which was held in conjunction with the Nonprofit Leadership Alliance conference. Both conferences were coordinated by Krick and Nonprofit Advisory Board Chair Ann Manley. The national conference brought together more than 800 socially conscious, career-minded students, academic professionals and nonprofit leaders for learning, networking and professional development.

Professor XiaoHu "Shawn" Wang and Assistant Professor Claire Knox, through our CPNM, were awarded the Corporation for National and Community Service's new Nonprofit Capacity Building Program grant. The CPNM was one of five U.S. organizations to be awarded the two-year grant to build and implement performance management systems to help achieve greater results for nonprofits in diverse communities. The Central Florida nonprofit organizations selected to benefit from the grant are located in west Orange, Lake and Sumter counties.

STRENGTHENING COMMUNITIES PROGRAM

Last year, Kapucu, through the CPNM, was awarded a $1 million "Strengthening Communities" grant funded by the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act of 2009 and administered by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. In year one, the CPNM provided capacity building training, technical assistance and financial aid to 35 nonprofits serving the distressed areas of south Lake, south Sumter and west Orange counties. Entering its second year, the program has begun to assist a second group of 40 nonprofits.

Representatives of nonprofits participating in the first year of the "Strengthening Communities" grant gathered on Dec. 3, 2010, their final day of the program. Joining them were several UCF faculty and staff members.

NEWS FROM

Urban and Regional Planning

In addition, during the last year, faculty members and students published two articles relating to nonprofit management and made 10 presentations at international and national conferences.

The strength of the programs and research in nonprofit management at UCF is in the use of service-learning to practice management skills and in the development of our unique strategy for capacity building using a team of graduate students and faculty members who provide individualized mentoring and services to nonprofit organizations.

Central Florida has been identified as one of the major growth areas in the state and planning has been recognized as one of the major policy issues for this area.

As Central Florida communities struggle with rapid growth and the creation of multiple modes of sustainable transportation, UCF is poised to educate more planners who can help them.

NEW MASTER'S DEGREE PROGRAM

In fall 2010, we expanded our minor and certificate programs in urban and regional planning to include a master's degree in the discipline. The new program was launched with a cohort of 13 students, and enrollment is anticipated to increase to 60 students by fall 2012. As the first comprehensive planning program for students in Central Florida, it is tailored for working adults who should be able to earn degrees after three years of taking courses part time. The new program is the first in the state to offer a focus on healthy community planning.

"Almost every national firm in planning has a presence in Orlando," Feldheim said. "The planning community has made a strong commitment to supporting the new program through its willingness to offer internships, mentorships and studio experiences."

STUDENT PROJECTS, NEW SCHOLARSHIP

Students in Assistant Professor Christopher Hawkins' "Managing Community Economic Development" course produced an economic development strategy report for the city of Winter Springs, Fla., that highlighted approaches and strategies for city leaders to consider in achieving their goals.

In the "Introduction to Urban and Regional Planning" course, a Lynch-like photo project was created using cameras to analyze city structures, such as nodes, landmarks, edges, districts and paths. The student's work was displayed at a planning gala held on Feb. 10, 2011. The highlight of the evening was a $25,000 donation from VHB MillerSellen to establish an endowed scholarship in urban and regional planning (see p. 19).

Locally, the planning-focus sessions of the Fifth Annual Public Administration Research Conference, "Healthy Communities—Healthy Government," explored the topics of clean water, neighborhood gardens, building healthy communities and resilient communities.

At the national level, Hawkins presented a paper, "Planning and Competing Interests," at the Association of Collegiate Schools of Planning in Minneapolis, Minn., one of the top planning conferences in the country. He presented his analysis of an interest group model of local policy and the adoption of smart-growth planning policies. Faculty members Knox and Wang presented planning research at the American Society for Public Administration Conference; Knox presented on Everglades planning and policy and Wang presented on financing conservation.

In addition, both Hawkins and Liou published articles focusing on economic development. Liou discussed government-business relations in China's economic development, and Hawkins focused on local government joint ventures in Florida.

In conclusion, creative service-learning, a faculty research emphasis on economic development and the Public Administration Research Conference's theme of planning healthy communities have put the new master's degree program in planning in the spotlight this past year. In the future, we anticipate exciting collaborations with Planning Advisory Board members, faculty members and students as this new program grows with its unique emphasis on healthy and sustainable communities.

Emergency Management

With increased natural and manmade national and international disasters, such as Japan's earthquake and tsunami, the need for trained, professional emergency managers is greater than ever.

UCF continues to help meet this demand by offering both an undergraduate minor and a graduate certificate in emergency management and homeland security. The Federal Emergency Management Agency's (FEMA) Professional Development Series (PDS) is built into the graduate curriculum, and students who complete FEMA's PDS receive a certificate of completion for their participation in the series.

NEW PROGRAM LEADERSHIP

In January of 2011, Assistant Professor Claire Knox, who joined the UCF faculty in fall 2010, replaced Associate Professor Naim Kapucu as the emergency management and homeland security program coordinator.

FEDERALLY FUNDED PROJECTS

Kapucu has secured a number of federal grants to improve UCF's emergency management plan, build disaster resilient and sustainable rural communities, and study the collaborative infrastructure in virtual organizations. As part of the "Emergency Management in the Heart of Florida" federal grant, the Center for Public and Nonprofit Management (CPNM) helped organize an informational day on Feb. 1, 2010, that coincided with a statewide Severe Weather Awareness Week. Emergency management professionals from throughout Central Florida hosted booths at UCF's Student Union, sharing with students what they do and how to keep prepared for severe weather. The Emergency Management for Higher Education project, funded by the U.S. Department of Education, provided emergency-procedures training to more than 5,000 UCF faculty members, staff members and students, and improved UCF's Comprehensive Emergency Management Plan.

Assistant Professor Hawkins and Kapucu were awarded a National Institute of Food and Agriculture grant entitled "Building Disaster Resilience and Sustainability in Rural Communities in Central Florida." They are assessing current hazard mitigation practices, emergency response networks and disaster recovery methods used by rural counties and rural parts of urban counties in Central Florida using network analysis to uncover relationships governing the functioning of resilient communities in response to disasters.

The CPNM successfully completed the first year of the National Science Foundation-funded project entitled "VOSS: Creating Functionally Collaborative Infrastructure in Virtual Organizations." The grant is supporting the analysis of a theoretical model of organizational effectiveness, field research on emergency response systems and other efforts. Learn more about this project in the CPNM annual report in this publication.

AWARD-WINNING PAPER

In addition, Kapucu and doctoral student Vener Garayev were awarded the 2011 William Petak Award for best emergency management paper by the American Society for Public Administration's Section for Emergency and Crisis Management. Their award-winner paper, "Collaborative Decision Making Under Stress: Designing, Development, and Sustainability of Emergency Management Networks," was presented at the 2010 ASPA Conference.

Lastly, in 2010–11, faculty members and students published six articles and two book chapters on emergency management, and they made five presentations on emergency management at national and international conferences.

Through the work of faculty and students UCF is becoming recognized as a leader in emergency management internationally.

Research Administration

The major components of public administration — administering and managing public services and programs — also are applicable to the administration of research programs in the agencies and academic institutions that ignite our research enterprise.

The need for highly skilled and knowledgeable research administrators has been repeatedly identified by professional research associations. The largest of these associations, the National Council of University Research Administrators (NCURA), awarded the Department of Public Administration a $40,000 grant in 2009 to initiate a fully online Master of Research Administration (M.R.A.) program.

FIRST-OF-ITS-KIND PROGRAM

Thanks to the leadership of Jo Ann Smith, program coordinator and assistant professor of public administration, and input from advisory council members from across the country, the department gained approval from the Florida Board of Governors in March to launch an M.R.A. program this fall. The program will be the first of its kind in Florida and among the first of its kind in the nation.

The purpose of the program is to prepare individuals for employment as research administrators in mid-to-high level positions at public universities, private research laboratories and institutes, hospitals and medical centers, and federal agencies.

Students will enroll in the program as a cohort that moves through curriculum together. The 36-credit-hour program is designed to be completed in two years.

The program integrates the professional competencies identified by the Research Administrators Certification Council. Graduates will be able to adjust to an ever-evolving research environment and will be equipped to meet the increasing demand for public accountability, governmental transparency and an expanding regulatory environment. In developing the program, Smith drew from her instructional design experiences, specifically examining how online social presence influences continuance intentions in professional development. In addition, she is a certified research administrator (CRA) with more than 20 years in research administration.

CONFERENCE PRESENTATIONS

This spring, Smith and Laurianne Torres (M.N.M., '10), senior research administrator at UCF, presented two sessions at the NCURA Region III meeting in South Carolina. More than 50 attendees packed the room to hear their presentation entitled "The Past, Present and Future of Research Administration." Their other presentation, entitled "Resources for Research Administrators," allowed preliminary data to be gathered from participants for future analysis of resources most commonly used by research administrators.

Smith also presented a paper this spring at the 34th Annual 2011 Teaching Public Administration Conference entitled "Development of a New Master of Research Administration Program: Administering Research for the People." She discussed the instructional design and development of the new program and the significance of teaching research administration to enhance the public trust in the U.S. research enterprise.

At UCF, Smith was invited to present two sessions, "What Every Graduate Student Should Know about Research Misconduct" for the College of Graduate Studies and "Effective Grant Writing" at the 2011 Graduate Research Forum.

This fall, Smith will be presenting at the NCURA Annual Conference in Washington, D.C., and the Society of Research Administrators International Conference in Canada.

Research administrators are critical in reducing the administrative burden on researchers, while ensuring accountability to the sponsors of research and the general public. "The placement of the

M.R.A. program in the Department Public Administration is a good and natural fit," Smith said.

2010-11 ANNUAL REPORT

Letter from the Director

The 2010–11 academic year has been a year of continued accomplishments for the Center for Public and Nonprofit Management (CPNM), as briefly outlined in our annual report. Partnerships with funders and community organizations have contributed greatly to our community-based research and capacity-building programs in Central Florida.

Our funding partnerships for the year are summarized in Table I, and highlights of recently funded programs are provided below. In addition, we have engaged in and disseminated relevant research by

- hosting nine research colloquium presentations, which brought together faculty expertise, visiting scholars, students and community members for an intellectual dialogue with researchers on topics relevant to public and nonprofit management
- cohosting the Fifth Annual Public Administration Research Conference on “Healthy Communities–Healthy Government”
- hosting four visiting scholars conducting research on public and nonprofit management

- facilitating Department of Public Administration faculty members and students in a promising research agenda as part of community-based research

The CPNM will continue partnering and conducting relevant research and capacity-building programs for public and nonprofit sector organizations based on our previous experiences in Central Florida and the global community.

The CPNM is a premier resource and partner to public and nonprofit organizations in seeking solutions to the most pressing issues. Visit our website (www.cpnm.ucf.edu) for additional information on our community-based research study results, capacity-building programs and student service-learning project highlights.

Please come by our office at UCF anytime to meet us and share your ideas for future collaborations.

CPNM in 2011

VISION STATEMENT

The Center for Public and Nonprofit Management at the University of Central Florida is the leading research center in the region addressing challenging community issues through collaborative partnerships.

MISSION STATEMENT

The mission of the Center for Public and Nonprofit Management at the University of Central Florida is to strengthen the management and leadership of public and nonprofit organizations through relevant research and capacity-building services.

Goal 1: Promote, conduct and disseminate relevant research in the public and nonprofit sectors

Goal 2: Build the capacity of public and nonprofit organizations

Goal 3: Enhance the CPNM infrastructure and funding to achieve programmatic goals and provide for growth

Funded Program Highlights

• “Emergency Management in the Heart of Florida: Meeting the Needs of the University of Central Florida Students, Staff and Faculty,” funded by the U.S. Department of Education. This grant helped the CPNM and UCF Emergency Management promote a culture of preparedness on campus.

Turn the page to learn more.

• “Strengthening Communities in Central Florida: Meeting the Economic Recovery Needs of South Lake, South Sumter and West Orange Counties,” funded by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. The first cycle of the program provided capacity-building training to 35 nonprofit organizations (and technical and financial assistance to 10 organizations) serving economically distressed areas of South Lake, South Sumter and West Orange counties. Twenty-seven nonprofits are participating in the second cycle, focusing on increasing organizational sustainability and effectiveness, and developing capacity for providing economic recovery social services through collaboration in nonprofits.

CPNM-SUPPORTED PUBLICATIONS AND PRESENTATIONS

For a list of some of the many publications and presentations supported by the CPNM in 2010-11, visit <http://ucflink.me/1s>.

Among them is a paper by Kapucu, Arslan and Demiroz that was selected as the Outstanding Paper Award Winner at the Literati Network Awards for Excellence 2011.

examines a theoretically based model of virtual organizational effectiveness using meta-analytic integration, field research on emergency response systems and laboratory experimentation. The project team has conducted and analyzed a public complacency survey, surveyed county emergency managers for qualitative feedback, and designed a network survey for the four metropolitan regions (Orange, Hillsborough, Miami-Dade and Duval) in the state of Florida. A graduate-level course syllabus on crisis communication and disaster preparedness also has been completed under this grant.

- “The Performance Management Systems Program,” funded by the Corporation of National and Community Service. This program is building and implementing performance management systems in nine nonprofit organizations to help achieve greater results for nonprofits in diverse communities.
- “Building Disaster Resilience and Sustainability in Rural Communities in Central Florida: Applications of Social Network Analysis,” funded by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, National Institute of Food and Agriculture. This interdisciplinary project seeks to assess current hazard mitigation practices, emergency response networks, and disaster recovery methods used by rural counties and rural parts of urban counties in Central Florida. The team finalized the literature review for the project and developed a conceptual model that identifies various components of disaster resiliency. The team is currently soliciting community advisors and developing a survey instrument for stakeholders in 11 counties.

CPNM, UCF Emergency Management Promote Culture of Preparedness

“Emergency Management in the Heart of Florida,” a project funded by the U.S. Department of Education from September 2009 through May 2010, enabled members of the CPNM, UCF Emergency Management and other campus offices, to review, improve and fully integrate campus-based, all-hazards emergency plans for the university and its Central Florida community partners. The most significant accomplishments of the project are summarized below.

- The number of UCF administrators, faculty and staff members, and students completing the National Incidence Management System (NIMS) training courses increased by 62 percent during the 18-month grant, far exceeding the funder’s goal of a 50 percent increase
- UCF established a formal advisory council for emergency management composed of local emergency management government officials, leaders from multiple UCF departments, and key community partners from the nonprofit and private sectors.
- UCF’s Comprehensive Emergency Management Plan was expanded and revised to be compliant with both the FEMA Comprehensive Preparedness Guide 101 and the NIMS.
- The university provided educational and quick-reference materials on emergency preparedness to more than 15,000 faculty and staff members, students, and parents.
- A national survey by the CPNM and UCF Emergency Management revealed that many U.S. colleges lack confidence in disaster preparedness (see <http://ucflink.me/1t>).

Annual Research Conference Focuses on Healthy Communities—Healthy Government

This year’s Public Administration Research Conference, named “Healthy Communities—Healthy Government,” explored challenges in implementing policies that shape the built environment for more equitable and sustainable development, encourage investment, and improve environmental quality.

About 100 participants attended the conference, held March 25, 2011, at the FAIRWINDS Alumni Center on UCF’s Orlando campus, where they heard presentations on the topic by UCF faculty members, doctoral students, practitioners and community partners.

The CPNM cohosted the conference with the Department of Public Administration, Public Administration Alumni Association, Florida Chapter of the American Planning Association—Metro Orlando Section and Central Florida Chapter of the American Society for Public Administration.

Highlights of the conference included the morning plenary session, “Opportunities and Challenges in Developing ‘Healthy Communities’: Orlando’s Lake Nona,” delivered by Thad Seymour, vice president for life sciences at Lake Nona Medical City, and four panel presentations. The lunch keynote address by Tim Center, vice president of sustainability initiatives at the Collins Center, on “Moving Toward a Sustainable Florida: People—Planet—Prosperity” also provided a thought-provoking discussion on sustainability.

Panel-presentation themes on local decision-making and governance, water quality and resilient communities provided multiple viewpoints for discussing “healthy communities.” Highlights include:

- Assistant Professor Chris Hawkins and Professor XiaoHu “Shawn” Wang’s presentation on “Participatory Mechanisms for Developing Healthy and Sustainable Communities” spurred discussions on local planning for healthy communities.
- Assistant Professor Thomas Bryer’s presentation on “The Costs of Democratization” outlined online public engagement strategies and opportunities for civic participation.
- Alissa Torres and Janna Souvorova’s presentation on “The Design and the Development of Large Scale Master-Planned Communities” engaged discussions on “healthy” land development projects and using design features to improve lifestyle changes.

- The panel on developing resilient communities in the context of disasters was lead by Associate Professor Fernando Rivera and Marc Settembrino from UCF’s Department of Sociology. They presented a paper on the role of behavioral and social networks in building resilient communities.
- Assistant Professor Chris Hawkins discussed planning perspectives relating to resilient communities, while a discussion on policy, administration and evaluation of community networks included Associate Professor Naim Kapucu, doctoral student Fatih Demiroz and undergraduate Rebecca Dodson.

Practitioners also shared their insights on building healthy communities throughout the conference, as summarized below:

- Luis Nieves-Ruiz from the Orange

County Planning Department investigated how healthy communities can be nurtured with home-grown produce.

- Assistant Professor Claire Knox and Victor Godlewski from the city of Orlando presented a paper on the Environmental Protection Agency’s numeric water-quality standards and Orlando’s easterly wetlands.
- Stephen Miller and John Prowell from the planning and engineering firm VHB MillerSellen provided complementary evidence of water quality in supporting “healthy communities.”

The Central Florida Chapter of ASPA sponsored a student poster session and contest, won by doctoral student Daniel Stephens for his research on the topic, “Using Active Transportation to Improve Waistlines and Bottom Lines.”

At the conference, students were also inducted into Pi Alpha Alpha, the honor society of public affairs and administration.

Research Colloquia Add to Vibrant Intellectual Culture

The Research Colloquium Series nurtures the CPNM's vibrant intellectual culture by providing opportunities for scholars and researchers from a variety of disciplines to share study results, present conceptual and theoretical arguments, and advance knowledge useful for public administrators and professionals in a variety of policy fields. The series attracts a diverse audience of faculty members, graduate students and researchers.

This year's presenters included Doctoral Program in Public Affairs' students, who presented their findings on topics such as collaboration and its antecedents in nonprofit organizations, motivational and attitudinal predictors of police discretion, and determinants of network sustainability in the emergency management field.

Public administration faculty members covered the application of critical theory to analyze public policies surrounding the Florida Everglades, intergovernmental relations and issues of metropolitan governance, public policies and their impact on urban African-American mobility, costs of democratization, and citizen participation in governance.

Visiting Scholar Abdurrahim Emhan (see below) participated by presenting his findings on the role of managerial support and satisfaction on organizational commitment in different sectors of Turkey.

Visiting Scholars Draw From, Contribute International Perspective

The CPNM hosted the following visiting scholars from Turkey in 2010-11:

- Savas Bayindir, Ph.D., a faculty member in administrative and economic sciences from Gazi University in Ankara, Turkey, has been conducting research on collaborative local governance from comparative perspectives since August 2010. He focuses on recall and initiatives at local governments as tools of participatory governance.
- Abdurrahim Emhan, Ph.D., a faculty member in administrative and economic sciences from Dicle University in Diyarbakir, Turkey, has interests in nonprofit development and capacity building. At the CPNM, he completed an article titled "Relationship Among Managerial Support, Satisfaction and Organizational Commitment: A Comparative Study of Nonprofit, For-profit and Public Sectors in Turkey.”

- Fikret Erkan, Ph.D., a judge of The Thirteenth Chamber of the Council of State in Ankara, Turkey, has expertise in legal aspects of privatizations and public-private partnerships in Turkey. With support from the CPNM, he is writing and completing a book on privatization of ports from a comparative perspective and has coauthored a theoretical article on privatization of military services.
- Remzi Findikli, Ph.D., a member of the Turkish National Police Academy and director of the Institute for Security Studies in Ankara, Turkey, has interests in globalization and comparative homeland security policies. At the CPNM, he completed a book manuscript on leadership and security.

Students Make Annual Tallahassee Trip

A group of students from UCF's undergraduate Organization for Public Administration (OPA) and Master of Public Administration Student Organization (MPASA) learned firsthand the demands of public office during the department's annual trip to Tallahassee, led by Assistant Professor Tom Bryer. The group visited the state capital from Feb. 16-18, 2011.

Assistant Professor Tom Bryer (right) led the group of students to Tallahassee in February 2011. Here, the group poses in a briefing room.

on the question of high-speed rail and intergovernmental relations. Our students demonstrated strong ability in critical thought and civil discourse in their dialogue with the Lt. Governor."

The group also had the opportunity to tour the House and Senate chambers, as well as participate in an OPA vs. MPASA mock debate on state employee pension contributions in the Senate.

In addition, the group met with Secretary of State Kurt Browning, UCF alumni who are members of the state Legislature, the staff director to Agriculture Commissioner Adam Putnam and the executive director of Volunteer Florida.

The students concluded their trip with a visit with the Florida Department of Elder Affairs' emergency coordinating officer and tour of the Florida Emergency Operations Center.

"Our first stop on the trip was with Lt. Governor Jennifer Carroll, where the group engaged in a discussion regarding Governor Rick Scott's decision to reject federal funding for high-speed rail," Bryer said.

"The meeting created a learning opportunity for our students on a number of fronts, including the demands of an elected official, the demands on staff of the elected official and, of course,

Master of Public Administration Student Association

Once again, the Master of Public Administration Student Association (MPASA) had another successful and enlightening academic year. During the fall and spring semesters, MPASA hosted a variety of speaker-series and social events for students to gather, learn and engage outside the typical classroom setting.

The first speaker-series event focused on regional planning and monumental decision-making. Harold Barley, executive director of MetroPlan Orlando, spoke to students about the regional transportation planning process and how it relates to long-term vision and decision-making. He discussed the importance of being an active and well-informed citizen as it relates to being a successful public administrator. Members and guests left with a greater understanding of our region's transportation needs and the fortitude that goes along with such "game-changing" decisions.

The second speaker-series event focused on economic development and local governance. UCF alumnus and former Orange County Mayor Richard Crotty spoke to students about local governments' role in economic development and the essential factor of diversifying Central Florida's economy through technology and biomedical sciences. The former mayor's "economic gardening" initiatives also were discussed.

Guest speaker Richard Crotty

In addition to monthly events, members from MPASA and its undergraduate counterpart, the Organization for Public Administration, visited Florida's state capital, Tallahassee, to experience state government operations firsthand (see story on p. 14).

Association of Fundraising Professionals at UCF

This year was one of growth and excitement for the Association of Fundraising Professionals—Collegiate Chapter at UCF. Chapter membership grew more than 30 percent since last summer. Our chapter officers, Jenna Wylie, president; Rachel McIntee, vice president; Alexander Kaplan, treasurer; and Adam Green, secretary, added new programming to increase the educational opportunities available to chapter members. In addition to our tradition of hosting distinguished speakers from the nonprofit community, AFP at UCF arranged for monthly tours at local nonprofits and intimate meetings with nonprofit leaders.

The collegiate chapter strengthened its ties with the AFP—Central Florida Chapter. AFP members attended and volunteered at many events and conferences including Planet Philanthropy, the National Philanthropy Day awards ceremony and the AFP International Conference in Chicago. In January, AFP at UCF welcomed UCF's own Carlee Thomas, director of development for UCF's Burnett School of Biomedical Sciences, as its new AFP—Central Florida Chapter liaison.

Most importantly, AFP at UCF gave back to the community through two service projects. In the fall, we funded the food, beverages, and trick or treat candy for the "Teachers in Action" Annual Halloween Bash. "Teachers in Action" is a partnership between UCF and UCP of Central Florida that serves children with special needs. In the spring, a group of AFP members began working on creating the first annual campaign development plan for "A Miracle of Love," a local nonprofit serving the needs of those diagnosed with HIV/AIDS.

Our newly elected officers are excited for the year to come. They will continue the legacy of membership growth, education and philanthropy that defines the AFP Collegiate Chapter at UCF.

Pi Alpha Alpha

The UCF chapter of Pi Alpha Alpha, the National Honor Society for Public Affairs and Public Administration, inducted 11 new members into the prestigious organization at the conclusion of the Fifth Annual Public Administration Research Conference, held March 25, 2011, at the FAIRWINDS Alumni Center on UCF's Orlando campus.

Students in high academic standing from the department's undergraduate, graduate and doctoral programs were invited to become members of the honor society. Alumnus Howard Tipton (M.P.A. '90) president of the UCF chapter, and Professor Kuotsai "Tom" Liou, faculty advisor, presided over the induction process.

This year's inductees are public administration major Marlin Bigelow; M.P.A. students Bryan Arnette, Stephen Caruso, Lilian Draisin, Tauheedah Muhammad; and doctoral students Maritza Concha, Fatih Demiroz, Mustafa Donmez, Nick Lebredo, Aykut Tongur; and doctoral student and Instructor Vanessa Littleton.

Nonprofit Management Student Association

UCF's American Humanics Student Association, recently renamed the "Nonprofit Management Student Association" (NMSA), provides educational and networking opportunities for any student on campus interested in working in the nonprofit sector.

This year, NMSA students contributed more than 500 hours of community service to local nonprofit organizations. The group also held events to raise funds for student travel and local nonprofits. In fact, the group raised almost $2,000 for American Cancer Society's Relay for Life. It also raised money for organizations such as the Juvenile Diabetes Research Fund, Samaritan Village, the Women's Residential and Counseling Center, Rock for Hunger, and Freedom Ride.

In addition, NMSA students continued to sponsor the Nonprofit Lecture Series, which brings local nonprofit leaders to campus to share their expertise. This year's line-up included 15 different speakers from the region.

Eight members of the NMSA received $4,500 NextGen Scholarships in January. This national scholarship is underwritten by the W. K. Kellogg Foundation to help support students complete a 300-hour internship in a nonprofit organization. Congratulations to this year's recipients: Ashley Caycedo, Caitlin Connolly, Ashley Gonzalez, Scott Johnson, Alex Kaplan, Rachel McIntee, Marcus Pruitt and Christine Sanwald.

To date, a total of 28 UCF students have received NextGen Scholarships. Among them is Rachel McIntee, who received the scholarship last year to help support her internship with the BETA Center. When asked about her experience, McIntee said, "It helped me to become more organized and a more confident leader. My supervisor, Lisa Blackwelder, gave me real responsibilities and made me feel like a valued team member. She has become a mentor for me."

Public Administration Alumni Chapter Plans to Restructure

The Public Administration Alumni Chapter is looking to restructure the organization to become more inclusive. The chapter will also be renamed to reflect this change. All alumni who serve in the public and nonprofit sector are welcome to join the new group to promote the positive impact UCF Knights have on our local community. The alumni chapter looks forward to hosting a working and brainstorming meeting this summer to prepare for a fall launch.

Please contact Katie Korkosz, assistant director of development and alumni relations, at 407-823-1600 or kkorkosz@mail.ucf.edu if you are interested.

The Public Administration Alumni Chapter is pleased to announce the appointment of Leo Cruz (M.P.A., '07) as president of the chapter. Cruz said he "looks forward to moving the chapter in a new direction this fall."

The couple lives in Gainesville, Fla., where he is a planner for the city of Alachua and she is a teacher at High Springs Community School. For a wedding photo, see <http://ucflink.me/1n>.

REBUILD Globally. Just days after Haiti's earthquake in January 2010, Julie Colombino, M.N.M. ('08) (below), traveled to the devastated country to offer help. Initially she provided medical relief in the mountains. Then she coordinated food drops to orphanages out of the Port-au-Prince airport. After three weeks, she returned to her home in Central Florida and promptly quit her job, sold her house and car, and headed back to Haiti to continue helping.

"Everyone there lost something. But the will to thrive was so prevalent," Colombino said. "How could I not be there to help?"

One of the best ways to help, she learned, was to provide jobs. So in August 2010, she and two friends founded REBUILD Globally, a nonprofit that employs Haitians to make sandals out of used tires. To start, they recruited a professional shoemaker who'd lost his home and business in the earthquake. He then taught several local women the trade. All now earn a living wage by making sturdy sandals, featuring attractive macrame straps, for sale in Haiti and online at www.rebuildglobally.org. The nonprofit also provides sandals to Haitian orphans through a partnership with European Disaster Volunteers.

Recently, REBUILD Globally added another eco-friendly item to its product line — colorful handbags handmade from recycled wrappers. Handmade bracelets, hair bands and wallets may be added in the future.

Colombino is now CEO of REBUILD Globally. This year, she hopes to expand the number of employees and introduce other programs to help Haitians develop self-sustaining skills.

Colombino's efforts were recognized in April when she received the 2011 "Public Administrator/New Professional Award" from the Central Florida Chapter of the American Society for Public Administration.

Laura (Creegan) Matthews, B.A. in psychology ('04), M.P.A., works as an assistant director of student conduct and conflict resolution in the Dean of Students Office at the University of Florida. In addition, she serves as a certified mediator and is certified as a QPR Gatekeeper instructor. She married Tyson Matthews on May 29, 2010.

Wonkiasha Washington, B.S. in public administration, minor in criminal justice, is a housing specialist with Osceola County's housing department.

Erin Hellkamp, B.A. in political sciences, minor in public administration, undergraduate certificate in nonprofit management, is employed as a public policy director for the Central Florida Hotel and Lodging Association.

JaVonte LaShae Mottley, B.A. in legal studies ('08), M.P.A., has been a certified social insurance specialist with the Social Security Administration for a year.

Sean P. Callahan, M.P.A., completed his graduate degree at UCF in the spring of 2010 while working full-time as a workers compensation claim examiner III at Sedgwick CMS. That fall, he began Florida A&M University College of Law's night program. He wrote that his M.P.A. education "has definitely contributed to my ability to add insight and opinions to class discussions."

Jessica M. Schwendeman, B.A. in political science, B.A. in sociology, minor in public administration, certificate in women's studies, was a Peace Corps volunteer working in community development in Niger (West Africa) from July 2010 to January 2011, when the Peace Corps permanently suspended all programs in that country due to security concerns. Read about her experience at www.jessicamaureen.wordpress.com.

In Memorium

Tina Davia, a thoughtful, hard-working M.P.A. student, passed away on Jan. 24, 2011. She was honored at UCF's Eternal Knights Memorial Service on March 30. (See www.cohpa.ucf.edu/eternal-knights/)

VHB MillerSellen Establishes Urban and Regional Planning Scholarship

Florida planning firm VHB MillerSellen has donated $25,000 to the University of Central Florida to establish an endowed scholarship in urban and regional planning.

Jim Sellen, a principal with the firm, announced the gift on Feb. 10, 2011, at a gala at the UCF Center for Emerging Media. The event celebrated last fall's launch of the master's degree program in urban and regional planning at UCF.

The new program is the first comprehensive planning program of its kind in the region.

"Central Florida is the ideal crucible for advancing the best practices for urban and regional planning, and the students in this UCF program will no doubt graduate with exceptional, firsthand experience in the field," said Sellen, who has worked in urban planning in Central Florida for more than 30 years. "Our firm is proud to provide support to the top prospective students for this degree year after year."

The first scholarship will be awarded this fall.

The gala drew dozens of planning professionals and several local leaders, including Orlando Mayor Buddy Dyer, Orange County Commissioner Lui Damiani (M.P.A. '94) and former county mayor Linda Chapin, all of whom spoke about the significance of the program to the region.

"As mayor for this great city of Orlando, I have developed a newfound respect for the planning profession and why planners are so greatly needed in a fast-growing and fast-changing city such as ours," Dyer said.

The event provided an opportunity for the program's students and faculty members to discuss displays on local planning projects. Central Florida is known for its innovative practices in handling rapid growth, planned communities such as Celebration and Baldwin Park, and new high-speed and commuter rail initiatives.

Our firm is proud to provide support to the top prospective students for this degree year after year.

— Jim Sellen

"Almost every national firm in planning has a presence in Orlando," said Mary Ann Feldheim, chair of the Department of Public Administration and part of the team that developed the program.

Many of these firms voiced a need for professional education in urban and regional planning to educate future planners for the region, she said. A master's degree is needed for most planning jobs, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Thirteen students were enrolled in the program in the first year, and enrollment is expected to increase to 60 students by fall 2012.

Master of Research Administration

UCF will launch a Master of Research Administration (M.R.A.) program this fall to provide individuals with the knowledge and skills necessary for professional advancement in the field of research administration.

The program is the first of its kind in Florida and one of just a few offered nationwide.

Program highlights include:

- Two-year, 36-credit hour program
- Fully online delivery
- Cohort model
- First class to be admitted in fall 2011

For complete program information, visit www.ce.ucf.edu/research.

What is research administration?

Research administration involves the development, management and implementation of research projects. These activities include collaboration and partnership development, strategic planning, proposal development and submission, contract negotiation, project management, financial management, and regulatory compliance oversight.
